TANNHÄUSER

ACT ONE

SCENE 1. Tannhauser, a minstrel knight (minnesinger) of the court of the Landgrave (earl) of Thuringia, has fallen victim to the wiles of Venus and dwells with her in the caverns of Venus Hill. But now, despite the visions conjured up by Venus, he longs to return to the world. Although he will always sing the praises of Venus, her pleadings are vain. His salvation, he says, rests in the Virgin Mary, at whose name Venus vanishes.

SCENE 2. Tannhauser suddenly finds himself in a bright, sunlit valley before the Wartburg, the rock-castle of the Landgrave. A shepherd sings of Holda, goddess of Spring. A party of Elder Pilgrims, bound for Rome, passes. As their voices recede, Tannhauser continues their song. Now the Landgrave and his knights arrive, returning from the hunt. They welcome the long-absent Tannhauser, who evades their questions as to where he has been. At first he declines to stay, but when the knight Wolfram, with the Landgrave's permission, relates to Tannhauser that Elizabeth, the Landgrave's niece, continues faithful to him, Tannhauser consents to stay. The Landgrave announces a song contest at his castle.

ACT TWO

Elizabeth, in great joy, apostrophizes the Singer's Hall, where Tannhauser is once again to sing. He is brought to her by Wolfram. They declare their mutual devotion. Thus, the generous Wolfram, also devoted to Elizabeth, sees his hope dispelled but feels no rancour. The Landgrave approves Tannhauser's suit and appoints Elizabeth judge of the song contest whose theme is the nature of love. The guests and singers assemble. Wolfram, by lot, sings first, Tannhauser answers, Biterolf intervenes with vigour. The argument loses its courtly nature. Tannhauser carried off by his memories horrifies the assembly by his reference to his sinful love with Venus. The ladies, except Elizabeth, leave. The knights draw their swords on the, at first, unrepentant Tannhauser, who is saved by Elizabeth. Her words put him to shame and he readily consents to the Landgrave's suggestion that he join the Younger Pilgrims and seek pardon from the Pope in Rome. Elizabeth offers her life for Tannhauser's atonement.

ACT THREE

Again the valley of the Wartburg. Autumn; Elizabeth is praying before an image of the Virgin. She and Wolfram, apart, await the Pilgrim's return. The Elder Pilgrims pass. In vain Elizabeth seeks Tannhauser amongst them. She again prays, asking Mary to accept the sacrifice of her life. Gently declining Wolfram's offer to accompany her, she returns sadly to the castle. Wolfram, feeling Elizabeth is about to die, asks the Evening Star to light her on her way to heaven. Tannhauser, ragged and pale, enters. At first aggressive, he then relents and relates to Wolfram his pilgrimage. For his sin in dwelling in Venus' Hill, his damnation is as certain as that the Pope's staff will never bear leaves again—this was the Holy Father's judgment. In despair, he calls on Venus, who appears at an opening in the rocks. Wolfram's efforts to detain Tannhauser are successful only when he pronounces the name of Elizabeth. Chanting is heard from the back. Wolfram knows that Elizabeth has died. Her sacrifice puts Venus to flight. The Landgrave, his court and the Elder Pilgrims enter, and Tannhauser, calling on Elizabeth to pray for him falls dead. The Younger Pilgrims return, bearing the Pope's staff which has miraculously put forth leaves. Thus is Tannhauser's sin expiated and forgiven.
